Felis Word	Etymis (English) Translation
Adel	Angel, Saint
Adel Jansaara	Saint of Silver (Lit, Angel of the Shining Sky)
Mortay Wahn	Eater of the dead, a type of vulture that is also a bird of prey (Lit, Dead mouth). "Sacred birds of the sky." Their wings are silent in flight. The call of a mortay wahn is said to sound like a "death scream" although few have heard it, except in the highest mountain ranges where the birds breed during the warm seasons. The air is clear, cold, and thin, giving rise to the myth that mortay wahn do not breathe. Honorable Kin are "given" to the Mortay Wahn at death. The dead are stripped, washed by the males of the clan with water blessed by the elders of the clan, and the finest garments of the dead are placed on raised cot-like altars. The bodies are then laid out with items precious to them in life, and the entire top is covered by a death shroud of finely tooled leather. On the day of the funeral, the death shroud is removed, and the clan gathers to pray blessings over the soul of the dead. The eldest family members wait a respectful distance from the body until the birds land and begin pecking. This is taken as acceptance of the soul into glory. NOTE: Term is also synonymous with "boogie man" in Kin fables in which villains are blindfolded and staked spread-eagled in the dark for the Mortay Wahn to devour. The villain not being able to see the silent birds as they approach makes it especially terrifying. NEW USAGE: Rescuer of Kin males sold into slavery or abused. Mortay Wahn is a figure dressed all in black, head to toe, with black-eyes like the bird. In human terms, a Zorro or Robin Hood type hero, much revered. Not a fable, but the identity (or identities) of the person(s) is unknown. He appears out of nowhere, saves the Kin male, often bestowing him with money or other items need to survive, and then disappears again, usually before being properly thanked. Luc Saint-Cyr's appearance suggests it is he, but he denies this and has been in public during episodes when Mortay Wahn is said to be active.
Mortay, mortayn, mortayng	Dead, death, dying
Mowr (as slang)	Happy sound (Well. OK. Good.)
Mowt	Mowt, a mouse-sized animal with a long prehensile tail and opposing thumbs. Highly intelligent and prized by humans as pets. Although they were once used as lab animals, humans now consider such treatment unethical. To Kin they're snacks to be chased for fun before eating. They snap the mowt's neck and pop it whole into their mouths, crunching bones and slurping the tail like spaghetti. Mowt is both a Felis and Etymis (English) word.

Suffixes, and Prefixes

Felis	Etymis (English)
Da- (prefix)	-er, -or (similar to Etymis suffix, as in leader, mentor)
Ee- (prefix)	Subordinate, as opposed to leader; may be second in command (i.e., eetzesar - assistant tzesar.)
-ee (suffix)	Little, small, also used with names to show affection or indicate young age (i.e., full first name Ehrstahn, nickname Stahn, boyhood name Stahnee). Not to be confused with -ees.
-ees (suffix)	Need, lack, empty, hollow. Added to amplify the meaning of a word, or make it imperative. Ex., Shlahfft (sleep) plus ees: Shlahfftees; "need sleep." Skrahl (wake up) plus ees: skrahlees (need to wake up). Not to be confused with -ee.
-en (suffix)	Used to put verbs in the past tense, only to clarify past from future. Because it is not always used, reading written Felis can be confusing to humans, who are accustomed to past tense verbs such as do, did, and done.
Es- (prefix)	-like or -ish, same meaning as "like" in Kin-like (Lit, like-Kin)
-ki (suffix)	Of the people. Used to designate the leader of Pride Council (tzesarki; leader of the people). Combined with other words to show affiliation to the Kin as a whole.
-lee (suffix)	Moving, changing, altering state. Letoh=kill, letohlee=beginning to kill or the act of killing (dependent upon context)
Pr, preh (prefix)	Before. Words beginning with R, use P. Words beginning with P, use Preh. In all other cases, use pr.
-vay	Denotes size or weight: bigger, heavier, harder
-li	Denotes size or weight: smaller, lighter, softer
-koh	Denotes size or weight: medium, average, general
Ehnah-	Negative prefix, sometimes shortened in casual speech to "Nah". Ex.: Ahmahr =surrender, ehnahahmahr =not surrender (also 'keep fighting, etc.)
