Felidae

The Kin homeworld

This planet is mentioned in, or action takes place here in the following books:

Alitus, Tales of the Chosen

Jawk, Tales of the Chosen

At the Mercy of Her Pleasure, Antonello Brothers

For Women Only, Antonello Brothers

Bro - the Story Behind the Story, Antonello Brothers

...and other upcoming books

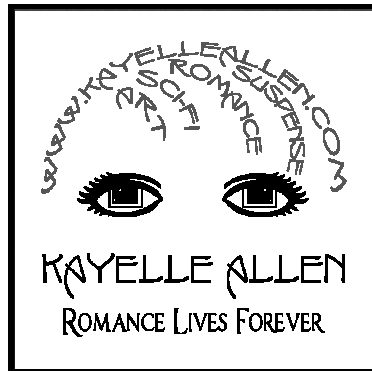

After the arrival of the Conqueror, Rheyn Destoiya, in Tradestandard 4625, males left the planet by the thousands, seeking jobs and adventure.

There are sixteen clans on Felidae, and the Ruh clan owns more land than any of the other three clans combined. The Ruh Rainforest is primitive and almost completely unexplored. It occupies nearly one-sixth of the planet and can be viewed here as a dark green stretching across the lower half of the image to the upper right. A miniscule portion is being harvested for medical research by the Chiasmii with full permission of the Ruh clan. Other clans are not pleased with this, and skirmishes between bordering clans have broken out within the last five years.

The Kin population is feline in appearance. They have cat-like irises, sharp teeth, and long incisors (fangs). Deadly claws hide beneath human-looking nails. They have downy fur skin all over their bodies, with a texture like velvet. Males of the species have few if any rights, and are kept in seclusion once married. Due to dwindling birth rates, it is common for females to have more than one mate, and breeders. Female breeders may be added to the family if no children are born within a few years.

The Kin are largely a rural, feudal society with loyalties to clan leaders called tzesars. Felis, the Kin language, is based on aspects of the tradestandard Etymis, which, as some believe, proves their joint heritage with humans.
